FISCAL ANALYSIS

ASSUMPTION

Officials from the from the St. Louis County Department of Health (County HD) state this proposal may cause the County HD to use staff resources if a foodborne illness investigation occurs. This will take away resources from permitted facilities.

If a foodborne illness breakout occurs, the public's expectation is for the health department to conduct an investigation. This proposal would tie the County HD's ability to conduct a traceback investigation at the place in which the food was prepared. Many health departments in the state enforce the Food and Drug Administration's Food Code which is a best practice model and based on science. In accordance with the Food Code Section 3-201(B), food prepared in a private home may not be used or offered for human consumption. If this proposal passes, it would hinder the public health agency's authority access to inspect the private home where the food is prepared as part of the foodborne illness investigation.

Oversight notes the St. Louis County Health Department did not indicate the potential fiscal impact of this proposal on their organization in their response. As a result, Oversight assumes any potential costs that may be incurred in the event of a foodborne illness outbreak occurs can be absorbed with existing resources.

Officials from the City of Independence Health Department (City Health Department) state baked foods are still capable of transmitting communicable and food borne illness such as Hepatitis A, Shigella, etc. Therefore, there would still be potential outbreaks that would have to be investigated by the City Health Department.

Costs for an outbreak investigation, assuming only one per year, would be approximately $25,000. This expense would include $100 each time the City Health Department has to follow-up on a complaint by the public that they see something wrong at the facility. In addition, there would also be hospital, doctor, and lab costs to the people who buy the food and become ill. These estimated costs are unavailable.

In addition, the City Health Department would lose $100 per establishment for the health permit that covers all of the inspections the establishment would need.

Oversight assumes the potential for outbreaks associated with baked goods to be speculative and is, therefore, not presenting these potential costs in the fiscal note. Oversight further assumes the lost revenue from the inspections to be minimal and the loss of this revenue to be absorbable by the health department.

Officials from the Columbia/Boone County Department of Public Health and Human Services (PHHS) state the proposal would result in lost revenue to the PHHS. PHHS requires Temporary Food Permits be issued for food events such as those described in the proposal. In 2013, PHHS issued approximately 121 such permits at a cost of $30 per permit. If this proposal passes, it is estimated that at least half of those events would not require permits, thereby resulting in a loss of at least $1,950 (60 permits X $30/permit) in revenue. This would be an annual loss in revenue.

Oversight assumes, for fiscal note purposes, the potential costs associated with outbreaks of food borne illnesses for any particular county to be speculative. Oversight further assumes the potential loss in permit revenues that would be lost due to this proposal to be absorbable by the cities and counties that currently require not-for-profits to obtain permits.

Officials from the Joint Committee on Administrative Rules (JCAR) state the legislation is not anticipated to cause a fiscal impact to JCAR beyond its current appropriation.

Officials from the Department of Health and Senior Services and the City of Jefferson City each assumed the proposal would not fiscally impact their respective agencies.

Officials from the Office of Secretary of State did not respond to Oversight's request for a statement of fiscal impact.
